Permission to appeal

REASONS

The parties provided competing proposals as to the proper order in relation to costs. The Tribunal prefers Nexans's approach (which was set out in red in the draft order) to the approach of London Array (which was set out in green). Nexans's approach allows the parties to make some progress on agreeing the costs of the London Array proceedings while leaving over the costs of the ROC Issue, without in any way prejudging the question of liability for those costs. More generally, the Tribunal considers that there should be a common timetable for costs and submissions in relation to the ROC Issue in both the London Array Proceedings and the Spottiswoode Proceedings and consider that can be accommodated by the terms of an order pursuant to paragraph 4 of these Directions.
